Portion of an email from William C. Enloe; poses an interesting theory:
Here is something else that I find very interesting.
I know that Joris Kindloson was in fact a Scottish soldier stationed in Holland. (my copy of a Dutch book gives me that info) Wouldn't a name ending in son usually mean "son of", such a Johnson meaning son of John?
Wouldn't the original of Kindloson probably be Kindlo or maybe even Kindloch? There is a Scotch name Kindloch which means "head of the loch", from lands at the head of Rossie Loch.
They received charters to the land as early as the reign of Alexander III, one of the earliest names of the kingdom, around 1250.
I have some of their history and their crest. I think that's an interesting possibility. (Scottish Clan And Family Encyclopedia)

The link between Joris Kindloson and the Enloes has not been documented, it is only found on internet postings and referenced also by Col. T. A. Enloe. Have no clue how or by whom the information was originally started. There is some reference to Dutch ancestry by descendants of Anthony Enloes and Hendricks Enloes, but not well documented. Researcher Jean Inlow believes there is NOT a connection to Kindloson and is looking for documentation to prove her contention in present day Holland archives.

Note by RBE (Robert B Enloe): as of 4/30/2005 [This is from RBE web site and book Ancient Enloe Family]

originally started. Hendricks Enloes stated in his naturalization application, his birthplace "was under the dominions of the States General of the united province" [ie, the United Provinces of Holland, or the Netherlands].

Recent findings [July, 2006] in his marriage record, Jan Enloes [presumed brother of Hendricks Enloes] was listed as born in "Duisburg". There is a town in Germany by that name, located a short distance East of Amsterdam. Perhaps the true ancestors of our Enloe clan came from Germany before they moved to The United Provinces of the Netherlands?

For futher reference, and potential reason for ancestors claiming Scottish origins:

3/9/2005 email from S Rosenblum

I just found this historical tidbit regarding Scottish soldiers in Holland: "In the latter part of the sixteenth century what was to become the United Provinces of Holland were trying to extricate themselves from domination by Spain. To help in this endeavour they obtained the assistance of volunteer soldiers from the lowlands of Scotland; the States General of Holland were given permission by the British government to recruit soldiers in Scotland in February 1603."
